What is Gateway to Community Living?

Gateway to Community Living is an initiative of the Alabama Medicaid Agency that helps Alabamians who are aging or have disabilities live at home in their own communities.

Who qualifies for Gateway to Community Living assistance?

To qualify for Gateway to Community Living, you must meet the following requirements:

- Currently live in a nursing home or other qualified institution
- Be a Medicaid recipient for at least one day before transition
- Be able to live in the community with services available from Alabama's Home and Community-based programs

What services can a person get through Gateway to Community Living?

Gateway to Community Living lets eligible people who currently live in an institution enroll in one of Alabama's seven Home and Community-based Waiver programs so they can still get the services and supports they need at home. Each waiver offers a different set of services, depending on the population it is designed to serve.

If you are interested in moving to the community, a trained Transition Coordinator can help you find out if you are eligible and talk with you about the available services that would best suit your needs for safe and healthy community living.

Are there any other services that will help someone make a successful transition?

Yes. People who want to return to community living often have some extra needs, such as help with planning the move, obtaining housing or even just some one-time financial help to make utility deposits or purchase basic supplies for the home. If you choose to transition, Gateway to Community Living may provide:

- A dedicated transition coordinator to help you make and carry out an individualized transition plan
- Help with costs related to the move such as rental and utility deposits
- Help finding and obtaining accessible and affordable housing
- Help learning about opportunities for jobs in the community
